Philip Dine is an experienced speaker and analyst on labor issues. He is widely regarded as an informative, motivating and entertaining speaker, able to discuss why trade union work is critical to the national wellbeing, how labor can strengthen itself, and the humor and drama of being one of the few journalists covering the American labor movement.

Dine has addressed dozens of union events representing a wide range of occupations over the past couple of years.

He also has spoken to groups ranging from Harvard University to the NLRB to the annual Texas Workforce Conference, and has been a frequent commentator about labor for TV, radio and print outlets from CNN to National Public Radio to Newsweek.
